Fix these first

1

Nice to have The main content takes too long to appear on a phone. (2 pages)

Why it matters: Google measures this (it calls it LCP) and wants it under 2.5 seconds. Visitors leave while they wait.

What to do: Make the main picture a smaller file, tell the browser to load it first, and remove scripts and styles that block the page.

What this report checks, and what it cannot see

- This report looks at how the site is built, the way a search engine's first pass does. It reads each page as sent by the server, without running scripts.
- It does not measure your Google ranking, how many people search for you, or links from other sites. The Search performance section is real data from your Google Search Console.
- We checked the first 15 pages. The site has more; they were not checked.
- Speed was measured by Google PageSpeed for 3 pages, not every page. Google's numbers vary a little from run to run.

Page speed measured by Google PageSpeed, 2026-10-18

92 on a phone

100 on a desktop

90+ is Google's "good"

Google loads the page on a slow phone connection and scores it out of 100. "Main content" is how long until the biggest thing on the screen appears (Google wants under 2.5s). "Movement" is how much the page jumps while loading (under 0.10 is good). "Busy" is how long scripts block taps.

SCORE	DEVICE	PAGE	MAIN CONTENT	MOVEMENT	BUSY
92	Phone	https://tapandlaunch.com/	3.2s	0.00	0ms
99	Phone	https://tapandlaunch.com/faq	2.1s	0.00	14ms

100	Desktop	https://tapandlaunch.com/	0.5s	0.00	0ms

Biggest wins

What Google says would speed these pages up most, in order.

1. Some style and script files block the page from showing until they finish loading. (up to 0.6s faster, 3 pages)
2. The page loads script code it never uses. (up to 0.1s faster, 3 pages)
3. The page sends old-style script code that modern phones do not need. (up to 0.1s faster, 2 pages)
